Frequently Asked QUESTIONS

Q How old are most accounts that are typically placed with Hunter Warfield?

Most clients place accounts with us before the account has aged 90 days. Internally, they have taken every step that they can to resolve the debt to no avail. After 90 days, there is little left that they can do without the help of a professional collector.

Q How does Hunter Warfield collect your money?

Information is power in the collection industry, and we strive for accurate and abundant information. Identification of your customer's assets early in the collection process and disclosing this information to them provides us with the leverage needed to resolve your account.

Q With the amount of information Hunter Warfield obtains on my customers, how much does this cost me now?

Not a penny. Hunter Warfield only charges you if we collect money on your behalf.

Q Does Hunter Warfield report my customers to the credit bureau if they do not pay?

Yes, Hunter Warfield is a credit-reporting agency. If your customers do not pay within 30 days, they are reported to the credit bureau.

Q If my customer still refuses to pay the account, what else can I do?

Hunter Warfield has a full-service legal department that can litigate against any company or individual anywhere in the United States and in some foreign countries as well. In fact, before filing suit, we can have an attorney make a demand on your customer – without ANY up front cost to you.
